Motorcycle riding season is getting underway — and there's a giant cloud hanging over the industry.

It's the question everyone has been asking: 'Will millennials start riding and (more importantly) start buying motorcycles again?"

Well, the jury is still out.

But, there are some interesting things happening in the industry that make me hopeful, especially when it comes to augmented reality and artificial intelligence.

Meet Skully Tehnologies, an augmented reality, artificial intelligence, wearable tech company.

Its first product is a motorcycle helmet that has augmented reality and artificial intelligence features.

It's called the Skully Fenix AR.
